Maybe you also have the impression that when you're not looking, familiar places suddenly come to life, become busy cities, mysterious worlds, where a lot of amazing stories can happen ... You've never noticed? Hmm ... In that case, I need to invite you on a trip. We'll check what can happen when nobody is looking ...

A book in the form of an album about places and items in the home familiar to every child: the bathtub, fridge, dishwasher, washing machine, etc. The author presents them as fairytale lands teeming with life, populated by various everyday characters that every child knows about—police officers, firemen, life-guards, scientists, skiers, musicians, pirates, filmmakers, explorers, etc.

The story revolves around a scout team on a trip through these different lands. In each place, one of the team members gets lost. In each chapter the reader has to find the scout as well as lost animals or thieves on the run—the content provides hints on what or whom we are looking for. Of course, in the end the whole team will get together again.

- a brilliant, unconventional way of learning about home appliances and the devices that surround us, and of enriching the child's vocabulary;
- humorous illustrations, with additional comic elements;
- each illustration features a lot of details to train the child's visual perception and observation;
- the illustrator also co-creates school textbooks
